

United States Senate

ARMED SERVICES

HOMELAND SECURITY

COMMERCE, SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION

BUDGET

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING

April 13, 2022

The Honorable Deanne Criswell Administrator Federal Emergency Management Agency 500 C Street, S.W. Washington, DC 20472

Dear Administrator Criswell:

With the start of hurricane season rapidly approaching, Americans preparing for potential storms are facing skyrocketing prices and empty shelves, making it even more difficult to take the steps needed to keep their loved ones safe during and after a natural disaster. The pressures of inflation and supply shortages are felt to an even greater degree by those on low and fixed incomes and by small businesses working to help their communities prepare for possible disasters. These issues cannot be ignored, and demand action from the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to ensure that storm preparedness does not fall victim to President Biden's raging inflation and supply chain crises.

As families in Florida and across the nation begin disaster preparations, I ask for your responses to the following questions:

- What is FEMA doing to ensure it has an adequate stockpile of emergency supplies to support families who are unable to afford emergency supplies or may be displaced by hurricanes? What actions has FEMA taken to prevent supply shortages for critical supplies, such as fuel, water and food, in the aftermath of a disaster?
- Given the steadily increasing prices Americans are seeing during to rising inflation, how will FEMA monitor and fight price gouging?
- Given the ongoing supply chain crisis, what guidance is FEMA planning to issue to families about preparedness and ensuring the availability of emergency supplies?
- What communication has FEMA had with local emergency management officials about ensuring the availability of adequate emergency supplies?

The Honorable Deanne Criswell April 13, 2022 Page Two

Making sure families are able to properly prepare for storms is essential to keeping Americans safe. I look forward to reviewing your responses and working together to keep Florida and our nation prepared for the coming hurricane season.

Sincerely,

Rick Scott United States Senator